Transformation of China's Diplomacy: New Disciplines New Paradigm New Strategy

Dear Guests,

The Carnegie-Tsinghua Center for Global Policy cordially welcomes you to our 2011 conference: Transformation of China's Diplomacy: New Disciplines, New Paradigm, and New Strategy. We are co-hosting this conference with Tsinghua University's Department of International Relations. The goal of this conference is to continue building the discipline and study of foreign affairs in China and integrate this into the broader discipline of international relations.

Rapid globalization and the revolution in information technology have propelled foreign affairs research and theory into a new stage. China's traditional diplomacy must adjust to these changes in the new global order. In particular, diplomacy—both in practice and in theory—is adapting to the pressing issues of the financial crisis, climate change, and regional instability. These are all challenges and opportunities for the continued development of foreign affairs study. The questions raised by these challenges affect not only the study of foreign affairs but also public diplomacy and cultural diplomacy. The goal of this conference is to discuss the transformation of Chinese diplomacy over recent years, how to continue to strengthen the discipline of foreign policy research in academia, and how this discipline is shaped by the global community of IR scholars, experts, and foreign policymakers.

To facilitate this dialogue, we have brought together a diverse mix of business leaders, media elites, community leaders, academics, and researchers from around China and the world. We hope that with their insights and your participation we can continue to build the discipline and study of foreign affairs in China and integrate this into the broader discipline of international relations. We are pleased to have you with us for this 2011 conference: Transformation of China's Diplomacy: New Disciplines, New Paradigm, and New Strategy.

Sincerely,

The Carnegie–Tsinghua Center for Global Policy

CARNEGIE–TSINGHUA
CENTER FOR GLOBAL POLICY

Endowment for International Peace and Tsinghua University School of Humanities and Social Sciences.

The Carnegie–Tsinghua Center for Global Policy is a joint research center based at Tsinghua University in Beijing, China. The Center was established in April 2010 through a cooperative agreement between the Carnegie

Endowment for International Peace and Tsinghua University School of Humanities and Social Sciences. The Carnegie–Tsinghua Center for Global Policy through its platform at Tsinghua University and Carnegie's global network of experts, brings together the world's top scholars and experts from China, the U.S., and the international community for collaborative research with an aim towards identifying effective and constructive solutions to common global challenges of today, including China foreign relations, international economics and trade; climate change and energy; nonproliferation and arms control; and international security challenges such as North Korea, Afghanistan, and Iran.

Tsinghua Center for Chinese Statecraft and Public Diplomacy

Tsinghua Center for Chinese Statecraft and Public diplomacy is an innovative think tank founded in November 2011. The center is aimed at enhancing academic and policy research in the fields of China's statecraft, public diplomacy, and national strategies.

Its emphasis is to provide creative analyses of significant theoretical and policy issues much needed by national government, and to be a national first class and world well-known think tank through interdisciplinary, inter-agencies, and international academic communication and cooperation.

Tsinghua Center for Chinese Statecraft and Public diplomacy is an open, nonprofit institution that serves three functions. First, as a think tank for China's statecraft and public diplomatic studies, it provides advise and counsel to the Chinese government. Secondly, it serves as a collaborative academic platform to support cultural and people-to-people exchange. Finally, it serves as a bridge for communication among various institutions from within the Party, government, military, people, academic, media and business communities.
